Musicalers, inavoidable, and incomparable are the Vertues and Excellencies of Commendation:
for as Instrument of Musicke, through errors or carelesly treated and excellently played on, may be able as to deceive the Eares, alienate the minds and elevate the imaginations of men, as the melodious and transcendent the harmonious Sound thereof which penetrates the mind.

Oh! if such beaming Lustre's in Arts Face,
What Beauties, what Perfections, are in Grace?
If in Grace more, what may in Glorie bee?
O, infinitelie more! but what in Thee
Lord, who dost all Transcendencies transcend!
O who beginne t'admire Thee nere shall End!

Some learned Friends of mine (whose Sacred Layes
Have crown'd their Browes with never-fading Bayes)
Made me the Subiect of some glorious Praise:
Which, vndeserv'd, should have been places here:
Sin (O that it were) its perfect sphere
But its refulgence would have beene too rebel
To my dull Meteors, whose small glim-ring might Evn by one Ray, have beene eclipsed quite.
Therefore my Anagram I only write.
